Carpets now so extensively manufactured and used in civilized countries, had their origin in Persia, where this industry had already attained a high degree of excellence by the beginning of the seventeenth century. The Persian habit of stricer and sleeping on the ground probably led to the manufacture or fabrics specially descend to meet the requirements of such a custom; and their carpets which thus had their origin in the common more sities of ordinary life, interwards found their way as leveries to other countries.

Old Persian carpets are commonly narrow and frequently long, for the reason that narrow fabries can be more easily woven than wide, and require a simpler hom. Moreover, the Persians' rooms were generally long and narrow; and their mode of covering the floors required four or more distinct rugs or carpets for each apartment. This mode is explained by the accompanying diagram in which A is the Kati, or carpet proper; B the Kenur, or side carpet (often made in pairs); and C Sorandoz, or head carpet. Both Smandat and Kenar were frequently of finely ornam uted felts, -in the manufacture of which the Persians still excel. The Persian loom is snaply a frame on which the warp is stretched. The woof consists of short threads weven into the warp with the fingers, without a shuttle. When a row of woof is thus completed, a sort of comb is inserted into the warp and pressed or hammered against the loose row of woof until it is sufficiently tightened to the warp. The weaver sits with the reverse side of the carpet towards him, on which the pattern can be distinctly traced. When finished the face is elipped down to an even surface, -(See Vajor Smith's PERSIAN ART.

Old Beloochistan carpets, which are made of goat's hair, have a singularly beautiful and lustrous effect finer even than that of Indian silk carpets and more subdued in ione, although the dyes used in Beloochistan are richer. The patterns are usually of the fantastical geometrical character found in Turceman rugs, from which the patterns of the early Brussels Carpets were derived. They are laid, on either a deep indigo or deep madder-red ground, and traced out in orange-brown or ivory-white, intermingled with red when the ground is blue, and with blue when the ground is red. The ends terminate in a web-like prolongation of the warp and woof beyond the pile, which, when striped or dispered in pattern, forms a most picturesque fringes—(See Dr. Birdwood's Hendbook to the British Indian Section.)

84—Hammersmith Carpets. Examples of hand-made rugs by Messrs. Morris & Company. London, as explained in the following circular issued last year:—

We respectfully invite you to inspect the hand-made Rugs and Carpets on which we have been engaged for upwards or a year, now on view at No. 449 Oxford Street; and in doing so, key to call your attention to the beginning of an attempt which we have set on foot to make England independent of the East for the supply of hand-made carpets which may claim to be considered works of an

We believe that the time has come for some one or other to make that attempt, unless the civilized would is prepared to do without the art of carpet-making when we of the West are beginning to do a not take that just when we of the West are beginning to do a not take all of the East that art is falling away, nor in any to so has the deterioration been more marked than in carpet-making.

All locality of color has now find in long) disappeared from the manufacture of the local—the once narmonious and lovely Turkey curpets. The traditions of excellence of the Indian curpets are only kept up by a low tasteful and energetic (coolders in Englant with innante trouble and at a great expense, while the mass of the cools as already interior in many respects to what can be turned out mechanically from the hours of Glargow or Kidderminster.

As for Leisia, the mother of this beautiful art, nothing could mark the cont. of Leisia, it the past and the present clearer than the carpets, doubtless picked for execultace of manufacture, given to the South Kensington Museum by His Majesty the Schab, compared with the rough work of the tribes done within the last hundred years, which the Directors of the Museum have judiciously hung near them.

In short, the art of carpet-making, in common with the other special arts of the East, is either dead or dying fast; and it is clear to everyone that, whatever future is in stare for those countries where it once flourished, they will in time to come receive all influence from, rather than give any to the West.

It recens to us, therefore, that for the fature we people of the West must make our own hand-made carpets, if we are to have anything worth the labor and names such things cost; and that these, while they should equal the Eastern ones as nearly us may be in materials and durability, should by no means initate them in desicn, but show themselves obviously to be the outcome of modern and Western id as, guided by those principles that underlie all architectural art in common.
